

CALL FOR CONFERENCE HOSTS

The British Women Writers Association (BWWA) seeks organizers for our 2028 conference and beyond, both in the United States and abroad. The BWWA's mission is to bring women from the margins to the center of literary history by promoting scholarship on and the teaching of long 18th- and 19th-century British women writers in diverse global and cultural contexts. In practice, the conference invites papers addressing women's writing as early as 1660 and as late as 1920, inclusive of the work of transatlantic and Anglophone authors.

Now in its 34th year, the Association runs an annual meeting, the British Women Writers Conference (BWWC), where scholars share new work in a collegial and collaborative space. The goal of the conference is to develop a global community of scholars from multiple literary periods, disciplines, and of varying experience and rank; to provide generous mentorship and support to graduate students and early-career scholars studying women writers; and to foster feminist pedagogy and rewarding mentoring relationships that shape the future of the field.

The BWWA promotes feminisms grounded in activism and intersectionality, and pledges to work toward social justice for and with writers and scholars, past and present, who are Black, people of color, LGBTQIA+, people living with disabilities, and of other marginalized identities.

If you are interested in hosting a meeting at your institution in 2028 or beyond, please send an inquiry to the BWWA co-chairs, Nicole Reynolds and Lana Dalley at reynoldn@ohio.edu and ldalley@fullerton.edu. We would appreciate hearing from you by September 1, 2026.

More information about the BWWA and programs for all prior conferences can be found on <https://britishwomenwriters.org>.

